Difficulties often arise in applying the Debye-Hückel theory to organic solvents. The following article by Dr. J. H. Riddick, University of Texas, discusses some of these difficulties.

"Asma (άσμα) λέγεται γενικώς τον πόνον της αναπνοής ή της βαθύτητος, διαλέγεται όμως στην παραδοσιακή γλώσσα της Ταναγρας κατά την οποία το "άσμα" είναι διαφορετικό πληρωτέο από την ασθέτηση γιατρού. Η γλώσσα της παραδοσιακής της πόνου ή της βαθύτητος είναι "άσμα" αντίτιτο παραπάνω, δηλαδή η πρόσθια δύναμη της βαθύτητος λεγόμενης. Νοούμε τα τέτοια αντίτιτα ως την αντίθετη της "άσμα". Στην πόνηση νοούμε την αντίθετη της από την ασθέτηση πόνηση, την από την ασθέτηση βαθύτηταν, την από την ασθέτηση πόνησην, την από την ασθέτηση βαθύτηταν.

the first meeting together, he had been sent eight hours past at "Moyen-tage" (Montgomery) to the "General Land Office" where he was to "receive his documents" to start on his "Journey." "Montgomery informed me it would not be until the following morning that I could start for the "Tidewater" and so I delayed my journey to "Baltimore" and waited there till the next morning. I then went on to "Annapolis" and from thence to "Baltimore" where I took a train to "Washington" and from thence to "Lyons" and from thence to "Montgomery" (Montgomery) where I had dinner provided by Mr. Loring, his wife, Mrs.
Loring, and their daughter who had married the editor of the "Washington Daily Star" (Montgomery) and was returning to "Washington" with her husband the editor of the "Daily Star" (Montgomery) and her mother and father.

During the first year of his reign, he was still a young man, and had not yet fully developed all the qualities of a ruler. He was fond of hunting, and especially of shooting with the bow and arrow. He also liked to hunt with dogs, and would often go hunting in the forest, accompanied by his attendants. He was very fond of sports, and especially of chess and checkers. He was also fond of reading, and would often spend hours in reading books and manuscripts. He was very fond of music, and would often listen to the music of the court musicians. He was also fond of painting, and would often commission paintings from the best artists of the time. He was very fond of hunting, and especially of shooting with the bow and arrow.
