Turks Report Mr. Child as Criticizing Allied Insistence on Details of Straits Regime.

Dec. 20, 1918

By EDWIN S. JAMES

Special Cable to The New York Times

LAIFRANNE, Dec. 19.—(Specialized by the Agency.)—The British Foreign Secretary, Lord Curzon, today told the Turks and Russians bluntly that they must take it or leave it. He said there would be just one more session at which the subject would be discussed and that would be held tomorrow afternoon. It would be easy to write of ultimatum and crisis, but the experience of many conferences, none of which has broken up in a fight, points to the conclusion that what is likely to happen, if the Turks do not definitely accept the British plan, is that Lord Curzon will call the conference to turn to the question of the adjustment of the Straits regime. A review of the Turkish situation will answer Curzon today.

The conference has said that it will reply to Lord Curzon's ultimatum with a counter-ultimatum. That is what he has to expect. The conference has said that it will reply to Lord Curzon's ultimatum with a counter-ultimatum. That is what he has to expect. The conference has said that it will reply to Lord Curzon's ultimatum with a counter-ultimatum. That is what he has to expect.

When Lord Curzon began to speak in behalf of the Allies at the opening of today's session, it was evident that he was tired of temporizing and had decided to speak in plain terms. His first look was to reply to the Russian and Turkish counter-proposals presented yesterday. Turning first to the Russian plan, he said:

"This amounts to closing the Black Sea to warships. We do not intend to accept that proposal. The Russian plan is based upon it, and ours upon another principle, which is the freedom of the Straits. It is impossible to reconcile the Russian plan with ours. We should take care for years without doing it. The Allies have no other alternative than to reject it. That is our final reply to the Russian plan."

Emphatic Rejection of Turks' Proposals.

"This plan has been carefully studied and I am very sorry to give the final reply. If we should adopt the Turkish suggestion as modification it would destroy the effect of our plan. There is nothing new in the Turkish suggestion. We have heard them all often and rejected them often. This matter has been discussed over and over and the Allies have given the limit in their own proposals. The Turks demand the right to fortify the Straits shore of the Bosphorus. We have decided against that, and it is impossible for us to recede. The Turks ask that Constantinople and Izmir be taken from the Turks. I have said three things in this conference that their leaders will never forget. I say now it for the fourth and last time."

As for Turkey's demand that she be allowed to maintain 10,000 troops in the Gallipoli Peninsula, Lord Curzon said that the Allies' answer was negative.

"Although we have made concessions after concessions to the Turks," he said, "refusing the Turkish demand that Constantinople be allowed to pass through the Straits, Lord Curzon insisted it is conceivable that the time might come when it would be worth while to reconsider. Answering the Turkish demand that no League guarantee for Constantinople was sufficient, Lord Curzon said he was positive way."

"When you consider the concessions we have made, I suggest better any more, it is to be expected it would be at least possible. We have all considered of our governments, but I strongly think that the Turks do not like our guarantee we will withdraw it, but we will make it better out. The allied proposal is to be to create one, and the Allies will be most anxious to reject them. We have done everything possible for the Turks. We will go to the Turks. The Turkish demand to let us see Lord Curzon's proposals."
